Sea tortoise are great reptiles that can be found in all seas of the world except the arctic, which is too cold. Unlike terrain, sea tortoise can't retract from their shipships. Also, unlike arena, sea tortoise has flippers instead of legs. The toggle helps them swim in the ocean. The flipper moves sea tortoise into the water, while flip them acting as rudders steer their paths. There are seven species of sea turtles: Green LoggerheadHawksbillatherBacks RidleyOlive RidleyFlatback Some sea tortoise are Herbivores, eating seagrass and kelp, while others are omnivores, eating others' sea life like fish, jellyfish, and cramp. Like other reptiles, eggs are bile to females, and sea tortoises breathe in the air. Some can hold their breath up to 30 minutes! Fi sea tortoise must come out to the sea and on the beaches to lay their eggs. (Evil never left the sea.) That makes them vulnerable to predatory soil since they can't move very quickly on tea. They dig a hole where they lay their eggs, usually 50 to 200 eggs at a time, depending on their species. Of the thousands of young babies who hate every year, only a handful are growing up for the arrival of adults, as most come to eat for other predatory states. The unfortunate seas have special glands in their eyes to help them flee their bodies beyond salt from sea water. This often gives the appearance that the tortoise tears out. Sea tortoise can be lived for 80 years. The largest species of sea tortoise, the leatherback, can grow up to 6 feet long and weigh about 1,000 pounds. The temperature of eggs determines sex in sea tortoise. High temperatures cause female tortoise, and lower temperatures result in males.
